

Practical Guide for Organizing Effective Joint Sector Reviews

The guide is a resource for decision makers and practitioners to engage in a collaborative process around the organization of joint sector reviews

The guide

- ➊ Introduces an effectiveness framework for JSRs
- ➋ Provides practical guidance for preparing, conducting and following-up a JSR
- ➌ Offers country illustrations and tools to facilitate multi-stakeholder engagement around the JSR process

The guide is based on research by the GPE Secretariat and shaped by a consultative process involving developing country partners, multilateral and bilateral development actors, international NGOs, civil society and academia.

What is a joint sector review?

A joint sector review is a government-led process that brings together different stakeholders to engage in dialogue, review data and monitor expenditure, progress and performance during the implementation of a national education sector plan. JSRs take a critical look at past achievements as well as bottlenecks and propose remedial actions. The process usually consolidates evidence on education progress prior to the actual review.

- ➋ Strong country leadership, inclusive policy dialogue and stakeholder engagement
- ➌ A comprehensive and sound evidence base composed of qualitative and quantitative information included in an annual implementation report
- ➍ Solid preparation
- ➎ Rigor in following up, and learning from, recommendations and ensuring a review process throughout the planning cycle.

Why this guide?

Joint sector reviews are at the heart of GPE's strategic objectives and results framework. They reflect the partnership's priority to work with countries for better and more effective monitoring to achieve national education goals.

The guide helps countries organize a collaborative process of review and course correction during the implementation of education sector plans. Reviewing achievements and critical issues identified during the monitoring phase helps adjusting the plan. The guide includes practical solutions for overcoming challenges often faced when organizing joint sector reviews.
